One of the prominent antlered members of the Best People on Earth who came to Honolulu to install the officers of the first Elks' organization in the Hawaiian Islands, is James Nelson, of Leadville, Colorado. In the Centennial State, Elk Nelson is the district deputy, G. E. R., B. P. O. E., for the western jurisdiction of Colorado. Not only is he an Elk, but he is a Shriner of prominence, and stamps his cards with "El Jebel Temple, Denver."

Mr. Nelson came to Honolulu with letters of introduction to prominent Honoluluans from A. V. Hunter, the millionaire mine owner of Leadville, who has frequently wintered here. Mr. Nelson is not possessed of the six figures that Hunter counts so easily, but the two began mining and business life in Leadville at the same time. When Mr. Nelson came to Leadville in the latter part of the 70's there were real elks to be found and shot within easy reach of the courthouse. He is one of the pioneers of the town that became celebrated the world over as the "toughest city on the globe." Leadville was certainly a hard place in its early days, and men carried their pistols in their coat pockets. The dead men of Leadville of 1878-1882 usually came to that estate by the pistol route, and Mr. Nelson made the most of their tragic ends. He was the undertaker in those days and had his hands full. In the days when the vigilance committee performed its noble work, sometimes by giving the twenty four hour leave notice, and sometimes by the hangman's noose, Mr. Nelson had as much work to perform as the sheriff. While he looked after the dead men that told no tales, A. V. Hunter dug persistently into the rich silver ledges that surrounded the silver camp, found some of the white metal, discovered gold later on, and became a millionaire in a few days. Big ingots of gold can be seen daily piled up in the outer corridor of the Carbonate National Bank over which Hunter presides. No one thinks of molesting them, as two men with revolvers stand near by to see that it does not walk out of the front door.

Mr. Nelson was to have come to Honolulu with the Shriner caravan, but decided to remain over in California until the Exalted Ruler of the Elks and his party came along. He is one of Leadville's solid business men, and is prominent in its affairs. While in Honolulu he is occupying the Snow cottage at the Hawaiian Hotel.

ROMANCE OF

While we were on the island several earthquakes happened and some of them pretty severe. On those occasions the natives were much terrified; they would not let their children speak a word, and they said among themselves--zahbeetoo Yarris, Tobee yetshmen--that is, Yarris (God) is coming Tobee (the name of the island) will sink. They were also very much alarmed at thunder and lightning, and used to say at such times, Yarris teetee, God is talking. I do not know how they would be affected by an eclipse, as none happened, that I noticed, while we remained there.

I will here mention some other things in respect to their customs and usages, as they now occur to me.

Their implements of war are spears and clubs; they have no bows and arrows. Their spears are made of the wood of the cocoanut trees; the points of them are set with rows of sharks' teeth, and, being at the same time very heavy and from ten to twenty feet long, are formidable weapons.

Their canoes are made of logs which drift to their island from other places, there being no trees on it large enough for that purpose; they are hollowed out with great labor and are of very clumsy workmanship; to prevent their upsetting they are fitted up with outriggers, like those of the Pelew islands.

They kindle their fires, as they informed me, by rubbing two pieces of wood together, as is common in the islands of the Pacific ocean; and they cook their turtle or other meat (when they are so fortunate as to have any), as well as their vegetables, by covering them with heated stones. I should state, however, that during the whole time we stayed among them, fire was always preserved in some part of the island, so that there was no necessity for kindling it in the manner here mentioned.

Like other savage people, they reckon time by moons; I could not learn that they ever reckoned by any other period, except, indeed, when speaking of two or three days.

They take pride in their hair and are particularly careful about it, washing and cleansing it almost every day. They do not color it, however, as the natives of some islands are said to do, but they moisten it with the juice pressed out from the cocoanut, which gives it a very glossy appearance; and it is frequently so long as to reach down to their waist.

Their mode of salutation is to clasp each other in their arms and touch their noses together, as is practiced in many other islands.

We found no musical instruments of any kind among them. They sometimes, on particular occasions, would sing or brawl out something like a riddle, but we could not understand it. We frequently tried to teach them to whistle and their awkward attempts to do it amused us; but they were never able to learn how it was done.

In their names I could not find that they had anything like a family name, but only a single one (corresponding to our Christian names), as is the case, I believe, throughout the islands of the Pacific. I could not learn that the names were significant either of animals or other objects, as the Indian names of America are, and I never found two persons of the same name.

The names of the members of the family with which I lived were as follows:

Fahrahbooh, the father of the family.

Nahkit, the mother.

Buhwurtimar, the eldest child, a son, ten or twelve years old.

Kobawut, the second, a daughter.

Kobahnook, the third, a daughter.

Wahrebo, the fourth, a son.

The children do not address their parents by any word corresponding to father or mother, papa or mamma, but by their names. Their parents treat them on a footing of equality; they are generally well behaved and are never punished except occasionally when impatient for their food.

Their language appears to be different from those of the other islands in that quarter; we found that the three natives of the Pelew islands that accompanied us could not understand anything they said; though I observed afterwards, occasionally, a resemblance in two or three words. The reader will, however, be able to judge for himself by means of a short vocabulary of common words which will be found at the end of this narrative. I may add that the Pelew chiefs had never heard of Lord North's island, but they are acquainted with the Caroline islands.

A detail of all that befell us would serve only to give pain to the benevolent, or at most to show how much human beings can endure. I shall attempt but little more than to describe the sufferings of a day; observing once for all, that for the term of two long years we experienced the same privations, and were subjected to the same brutal treatment; life, during all that time, being no better than the constant succession of the most acute sufferings.

This island, unlike the Peléws, is one of the most horrible and wretched on the face of the globe. The only product of its soil worth mentioning is the cocoa tree; and those are of so miserable and dwarfish a growth as to bear but very few nuts. These few, however, constitute the food of the inhabitants, with the exception of a species of fish caught occasionally near the shore. The only animals or creeping things known on the island are lizards and mice, and during our stay there, scarcely a solitary set fowl was known to have alighted on the island, and but few fish were taken by the natives.

A VERSATILE FELLOW.

Maurice Thompson was a civil engineer, a soldier, a lawyer, a politician, a naturalist, a novelist, a poet and an editor, and he achieved considerable distinction in each of these occupations, though he appears to have been least successful in politics, as he got only as far as being elected a member of the Indiana legislature and a delegate to a Democratic national convention.
